Activity Idea: Lego-Club at Home

Many children will be familiar with school Lego Groups to help build positive social and communication skills, and these can be simplified to try at home too as a 1:1 activity with your child.

One of you holds all the pieces (the Builder), and the other holds the instructions and describes the pieces that are needed and where they go to build a model (the Engineer).

You can take-turns as you go along, so see how long it takes you – it's trickier than it sounds so start with something small!

Let's Hear It For The Guys!

It is half-way through MOVEMBER, and many men are showing some interesting facial hair to support awareness of men's health and mental health needs. It is worth a reminder of the huge importance of men in the development and raising of children, whether Dads, Step-dads, Grandads, Uncles or friends.

Men often bring a different perspective or way of interacting and playing, that can be beneficial for child wellbeing and raising all-rounded children. Having men involved in children's lives can have a positive impact on self-esteem, self-worth, social relationships, education, and children's ability to adapt to changes like going to school or moving into adult life.

The Movember Foundation are supporting Family Man, a free online parental coaching programme from a male perspective. It's in short accessible episodes and aims to help provide tools and resources that help to build a stronger and more connected family. They recognise that raising children is a team-effort, so all parents, carers, partners, and grandparents are welcome to access the programme. Find out more at:
